Carter Ledyard's multi-disciplinary Digital Currency and Blockchain Practice Group provides comprehensive legal counsel to clients operating on the blockchain and in the rapidly-evolving space of digital currencies. We work closely with clients to provide both practical and cutting-edge advice based on the latest developments in the law, ensuring that our clients receive optimal representation tailored to their specific needs.

Our attorneys have the knowledge and experience to advise clients on a broad range of transactions and issues involving cryptocurrencies, NFTs, decentralized finance, smart contracts, initial coin offerings (ICOs), security token offerings (STOs), regulatory compliance and investigations, lending and deposit accounts, securitization and securities issuances, onshore and offshore tax implications, lending, retail use, licensing requirements, intellectual property, software code and data security, liquidity issues, bankruptcy, and trusts & estates involving the ownership and transfer of digital assets. Our team is equally equipped with the experience, knowledge, and skills to handle the full spectrum of disputes and litigated matters, both civil and criminal, arising out of each.
